

David Hall is an architect practicing out of his studio in Edison (STUDIOEDISON). Parallel personal interests through the years have included backcountry hiking, painting, photography, fly-fishing, gardening and landscaping. His work has focused, literally and figuratively, on nature, architecture, home and family. His goal is to capture the essence of a particular place or object through the mediums of watercolor, pencil or photography, often undertaken while hiking, traveling, camping, fly-fishing or just being at home. The creative process is always the challenge and often the reward.
